Restore access to over half a million books as per publishers' request. This involves chapter designation, definitions, and regulations. Publishers must adhere to certain acts prohibited under Section 4303, especially regarding licenses for enemy or ally insurance companies. There are also provisions related to suspension of transactions in foreign exchange, property transfers, and enforcement of penalties (Section 4305). The Alien Property Custodian has general powers and duties as outlined in Section 4306. Lists of enemy officers, directors, or stockholders must be maintained, along with acts constituting trade prior to October 6, 1917. Contracts against or with the enemy can be abrogated (Section 4308), and claims to property transferred to the custodian are handled through notice, filing, return of property, suits to recover, and sale of claimed property in times of war or national emergency. Acts permitted include applications for patents, registration of trademarks or copyrights, payment of tax, licenses under enemy-owned patents or copyrights (Section 4310). Importations are prohibited if they pose a threat (Section 4311). Property transferred to the Alien Property Custodian is managed as per Section 4312, and statements must be made by masters of vessels and owners of cargoes before granting clearances. False manifests lead to refusal of clearance and reports on gold or silver coins in cargoes for export are required. Offenses carry punishment, forfeitures of property, and rules are set by district courts with appeals (Sections 4315 and 4316). Fees for agents, attorneys, or representatives are also specified (Section 4317). Claims of naturalized citizens as affected by expatriation are handled in Section 4318. Fugitives from justice are barred from recovery in Section 4319. Payment of income and expenses by the Alien Property Custodian is detailed in Sections 4320 and 4321, including investments in participating certificates issued by the Secretary of the Treasury. Transfers to and payments from German, Austrian, or Hungarian special deposit accounts are allocated according to Section 4322. The "unallocated interest fund" is also allocated as per Section 4323, with returns made by the Custodian to the United States as outlined in Section 4324. § 4325.
